Two big stories... at least

Two big stories start in this issue, and they're definitely only starting... We will be following them up in future issues.

As we reported in the May issue, East Europeans sleeping rough in certain areas are starting to be deported as part of a UK Border Agency trial. Now, some of you reading this – and a fair number at that! – will say “not before time.” But readers who have complained in the past about East Europeans swamping soup runs and filling their favourite day centres, should consider why this action has begun. In light of the target for 2012, we're asking why is it only happening now, and not when they first arrived.

Related to this, we look at the Vagrancy Act, which may be used more frequently across the UK, especially in the lead up to 2012 (see RS205 story, page 11 & 12). At a time when a new government is asking the public which laws it would like to see scrapped, we revisit the Vagrancy Act in news-in-brief and call for its repeal. We also delve into this law's absurd history (pages 19 - 21).

As always, send stories and feedback to us at the address/number/email on the left.

An deportation scheme is being trialled by UKBA for East European rough sleepers

The UK Borders Agency (UKBA) is trialling a system in parts of the country, which enables it to deport Europeans who are found to not be "working, studying or self-sufficient".

Previously, UKBA was not able to force Europeans to leave the country. However the new scheme, which began on 31 March, gives roughly a month's notice before steps can be taken to forcibly deport people if they have been in the UK for longer than three months, but are not, and "have no prospect" of, working or studying.

UKBA representatives serve individuals who have been identified as "persistent low-level offenders" with written notices (see two pictured), informing them they must appear at a local police station for an interview, to determine whether they have the right to remain in the country.

At one interview, it is understood that authorities confiscated the person's ID, telling them it would be returned only when they were boarding the bus home.

More than 40 notices have been served to people from Eastern European countries such as Poland, Slovakia and Estonia in the London borough of Westminster alone, and 14 interviews have taken place so far. To date, three people have been removed from the borough, and 15 have "chosen to return home voluntarily, as part of this process", the UKBA told The Pavement.

In at least two of these cases, it is understood that the people were woken up during the middle of the night, echoing a tactic used by Westminster Council during the last two years as part of Operation Poncho.

The initiative is also being used across England only, in Lambeth, Oxford, Reading, Brent and Peterborough.

Although the scheme was started under the Labour government, the pilot schemes will continue running under the new Conservative home secretary Theresa May, and an evaluation will be made in six months' time to decide whether to deploy it more widely. According to London Delivery Board minutes from March, the UKBA and CLG will be reporting progress to ministers each month.

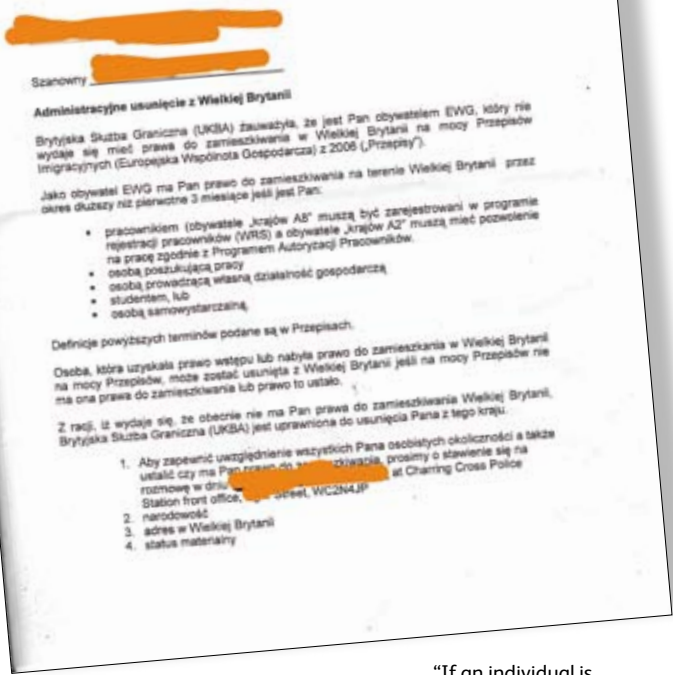

Although the scheme was only adopted recently, a UKBA spokesman said it "builds" on work previously carried out by the agency to enforce immigration law. Spokesman Stephen Carter said: "Last year, we announced powers to remove EEA [European Economic Area] nationals who do not have the right to stay in the UK. In line with that commitment, we have begun trialling this new approach, removing EEA nationals who are not seeking work or studying, or who are persistent offenders who cause harm to our communities."

The initiative so far has been "focusing on problem areas in local communities, including areas where there are challenges with rough sleeping and anti-social behaviour", he added.

"The aim of the scheme is to consider the feasibility of removing persistent low-level offenders who are nationals of the EEA and those who do not have a right to live in the UK. EEA nationals who have been in the country for longer than three months have to be working, studying or self-sufficient in order to have a right to stay. If they are not, or don't have a genuine prospect of doing so, the UK Border Agency expects them to reside in the UK and, if not, to make an informed decision whether to attend the meeting or not," he said.

But concerns have also been raised that the move may simply drive people underground, away from services designed to help them, out of fear they will be forced to leave the country.

"These people had their work IDs, they had their passports, the only thing they didn't have was a roof over their heads," said Rudi Richardson of Streetlytes. "But once they have been served with the letter, there is no legal representation, no liaison to represent them in their native language.

"And the problem is they may go further underground and become afraid to talk to anybody, simply because they don't know who to trust. If they go to a hostel and give their information, for example, they don't know if it will be passed onto the police. So they start to feel – and act – like fugitives, criminals."

But when this point was put to Mr Carter, he said the interview gave individuals "the opportunity to provide evidence that they are exercising a treaty right" – in other words, working or studying.

He added: "This does not affect their ability to request support or voluntary repatriation at any stage of the process. There is a strong link between those involved in rough sleeping for significant periods of time and those with serious health, drug, drink, and social problems."

Nearly 40 per cent of rough sleepers are from the A8 and A2 countries, according to minutes from a London Delivery Board meeting in November. March's minutes recorded that CHAIN had sent outreach providers an "asylum and immigration survey" to ascertain to what extent asylum seekers who have gained status are sleeping rough in London.

Catherine Neilan

return home," he said.

Mr Carter explained those who had been served with letters had "been identified by the agency in a number of ways, including referrals from local councils and police".

Organisations such as Homeless Link and Streetlytes have sought legal advice on the scheme, but although James Welch, legal director at Liberty, agreed it left people in "an invidious position", he was adamant it breaks no law.

He explained via email: "[A]n unemployed Polish national who has been here for more than the initial 90 days but has not completed a year of registered employment and who is not self-sufficient does not have a right of residency.

"The 2006 Regulations provide that, if there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that a person does not have a right to reside, they may be detained whilst a decision is made whether or not to remove him/her.

"If an individual is notified that they should leave the country he/she should be given a month in which to comply but could be arrested and detained pending removal."

He added: "This would appear to leave the people who have been given the letters in an invidious position.

"If they do not have a right to reside here and attend the appointments they have been given, they may well be given notification to leave the country at the meeting and could be detained.

"If they do not attend their appointments, that may give sufficient grounds to justify arresting them. Of course they may be able to meet the requirements for residence and will be able to use the opportunity of the meetings to show this."

Mr Welch advised anyone who receives a letter to check their immigration status before attending the interview. "This should allow them to determine whether they do have a right to

Scottish news

All the homeless news from Aberdeen, Edinburgh and Glasgow

I say I say...

Scottish Homelessness Involvement & Empowerment Network (SHIEN) recognises the importance of having your say, and supports and promotes service user involvement in homelessness services across Scotland.

The network is free to join for individuals and organisations, so people can keep up to date with upcoming events and find the best way of making sure their voices are heard.

Established in 2008, the network is supported by the Scottish Government and facilitated by Glasgow Homelessness Network. Over 400 people and organisations have joined the network, and include service users, managers, frontline staff, and decision makers.

Sometimes, the importance of service user involvement is not recognised in services, and is either seen as using up vital resources or an irritating form-filling requirement. Very often, responsibility can be an addition to an already very chronic workload. By bringing together people who have had positive experiences of service user involvement and by offering easy guidelines getting started, SHIEN helps services understand the benefits of service user involvement and share good practice.

The network supports service user involvement by hosting free events in local areas, bringing together service users, frontline staff, decision makers and managers to discuss local problems and try and find solutions. Events were held in Aberdeen and Stirling last year, to generate ideas on how to improve services. One example was a booklet about a residential service produced by its young users, which was given to them at their first appointment. Another was from an individual who had been sleeping rough, who started volunteering and ended up leading the project which had helped him settle in his own home.

The Resource Exchange website provides information on all events, and encourages people to pass on useful information. It also includes tips to improve service user involvement.

Festival time

The streets are alive with festivals and gala days this summer, and here's our pick of those that readers might enjoy. Come rain or shine, these events bring music, dance and drama onto the streets of our towns and cities... and best of all many of the events are free!

Leith Festival

11 - 20 June

Leithers have forever been proud of their distinctive identity and the festival celebrates all Leith has to offer - heritage, culture, diversity, future and people. And festival organizers are clear that this includes the local homeless people, 'The Leith Festival wholeheartedly believes in the values that come with the word community, and the homeless of Leith are no exception, and add to Leith's character', a spokesperson explained.

The 10 day programme features over 150 events in 50 venues within a mile radius from the heart of Leith. Highlights include:

A traditional gala day and parade on 12 June, starting with the parade from Lochend Park. Leith Links will come alive with a full line up of bands headlined by The Void, stalls and the annual tug-of-war competition.

Artists open studios - Coburg House Studios and Albion Road Business Centre open their doors for a free exhibition of artists' work, in addition to other arts and craft events throughout the festival.

Film - The festival is pairing up with Leith Short Film Festival to offer some of the best contemporary shorts from across Scotland and the world. (10 & 11 June, Duncan Place Resource Centre, free). In addition, Word of Mouth Film Nights will be exhibiting some of the best local talent, or pop in to Sofi's or The Pond to enjoy the cinematic stylings of Leith's most celebrated writer, Irvine Welsh.

For more info visit www.leithfestival.com or pick up a brochure from venues throughout Leith.

West End Festival Glasgow, 7- 27 June

Also in June is the West End Festival, Glasgow's biggest. Boasting almost 430 events across 50 venues in its fifteenth anniversary year, the festival presents an eclectic mix of music, theatre, dance, comedy, exhibitions and political debate, in a mix of free and ticketed events.

The West End Festival has a clear community focus and aim to be accessible to all. A spokesperson explains, "The West End Festival is for everyone to enjoy. We are incredibly proud that so many of the events are free, which means that more people from across the city from all different backgrounds can enjoy many of the events.

Highlights include:

Festival Sunday, Kelvingrove Park, 13 June - Five stages of live music and performances, including the Vintage Guru New Talent Stage, family activities, food and a licensed bar.

Mardi-Gras parade opening parade, 13 June - hundreds of bands, performers and community groups from across Scotland will bring life and colour to Kelvin Way with a theme of 'Myths and Legends' so expect to see dragons, unicorns, Nessies and more.

La Fete de la Musique, Ashton Lane, Sat 19 June – part of an international day of musical performance, La Fete invites musicians of all genres / calibres to play for free. Expect choirs, jazz, indie, folk and lots more, performing in bars, cafes and on the lane.

Nice works

Foyer Works, a branch of charity Aberdeen Foyer which creates jobs for disadvantaged young people, has been contracted to carry out property maintenance within council homes in Banff and Buchan.

The enterprise provides a property maintenance service to housing associations, private clients, voluntary organisations and Aberdeen City Council.

A base was established in Fraserburgh after the firm secured a contract to carry out work for the council, and has recruited a supervisor and four young people as trainees. They have already been busy on various projects including decorating and garden maintenance.

Aberdeen Foyer's commercial director, Leona McDermid, said: "Foyer Works has already supported several young people into work in Aberdeen and it has always been our aim to set up a team in the north."

"A combination of the work from Aberdeen City Council, the Future Jobs Fund and sponsorship from Exxon Mobil has made this possible and as a result we already have five people into work in a sustainable business that has potential for growth."

Chairman of Aberdeenshire Council's Social Work and Housing Committee, Councillor Gurudeo Saluja, said: "I am heartened to see Aberdeenshire Council working closely with such a worthwhile social enterprise that is helping young homeless people gain valuable skills to carry them into the workplace and out of deprivation."

Move over, Banksy

We were tickled by this example of guerrilla art in Portobello (pictured overleaf, photography by Paul Lambie), whose creator thought the shabby fence surrounding a nice piece of green space beside the beach land could use some TLC. He picks up the story:

"There seems to be plans to build on this bit of waste ground. Kids play football here, people picnic and it's a nice patch of green by the beach. The owner of the plot can see a way of squeezing flats in so it looks like it's going to go. I'm sure a shabby fence in disrepair makes for an easier planning application so there's not been any interest in repairing the fence that borders the Promenade. I was sitting on the sea wall and noticed that the ugly fence cast interesting shadows and thought there might be some fun in repairing it. If flats go up here the shadows we'll get will be cast on over the beach.

"I put the planks up very early on Tuesday morning because the weather report said sunshine all day. The holes were pre drilled so as not to make too much noise and they went up quick. I honestly hadn't given too much thought to how they'd look from the grassy side of the fence with the sun rising behind them, so it was a huge bonus to see them backlit like that. At lunchtime I sat on the wall with an Espy ginger beer and watched folk trying to read the backwards writing, walking round the fence and stopping on the prom to read the shadows.

"I walked past on the way to work on Wednesday and one of the planks had been knocked down. Poor workmanship on my part and a decent strike from a footballist, I reckon. The fence has been slowly and systematically broken up for beach bonfires so I was expecting the planks to disappear at some point but I'd hoped they'd last longer than 24hrs. I didn't have time to stop so it was well after lunch when I went down with my screw gun, false beard and chunkier screws. Turns out that at some point during the day some excellent Party resident had nipped in and put the plank back up.

"Maybe someone else will come along and add another plank. There's a dot, dot, dot after 'seaside'."

New learning centre for Glasgow

Glasgow's Lodging House Mission (LHM), which has been helping the homeless for more than 100 years, has re-opened a new-look learning centre to teach IT and literacy skills to people in some of the city's poorest areas.

The enterprising workers at the centre picked up the Public Services Team Award for East Centre and Calton, in the Evening Times Community Champions awards.

The drop-in centre in Calton has undergone a major refurbishment with the aid of Big Lottery Funding, Glasgow City Council's Calton Area budget and Morris & Spottiswood. It now boasts 14 computers, access to technical support, and a connection to the Glasgow East Learning Network.

Vulnerable adults with a variety of issues from drug addiction to mental health problems can now learn in a comfortable and welcoming environment. The LHM is also a day centre, drop-in cafe and church for Glasgow's homeless and resettling communities, with shower facilities, an emergency clothing store, help and support from care staff, and a chaplaincy service.

Out for the count

Edinburgh council is again under fire, this time from one of its own councillors, who claims its current way of measuring the number of homeless people in the city is failing to record the true number of people sleeping rough.

Speaking at the health, social care and housing committee, Councillor Gordon Munro called for a report into the issue. He said he had been contacted by a number of organisations that deliver services for homeless people in the city, and that the council's reports of a decrease in the number of rough sleepers was contradicted by personal experience.

He mentioned a shelter for rough sleepers that he visited just before it was closed down. "I asked, what happens to these people next week? There were 40 people there. I still don't know the answer to that."

Councillor Elaine Aitken had also visited the shelter on the same night, and commented on the fact that many of the homeless people in Edinburgh were from Eastern-Europe, and did not easily fit into council services.

"They do live very chaotic lifestyles, which make it hard to get tenancy - they've lost their passports, their ID cards...they've slipped through every net," she said.

Convenor of the committee, Councillor Paul Edie, said he would seek “further sources of information” from providers, but fell short of calling for a full report on the way homelessness is measured.

Edie rejected Munro’s suggestion that the council’s policy on homelessness was not successful. He said that he was quite willing to hear from organisations working with homeless people on the issue – but that he had heard nothing to that effect so far.

He also pointed out that the methodology used to measure homelessness was the same one that had been used by the last Labour council administration.

New brew

Streetwork UK has just been given planning permission to convert a vacant Edinburgh shop into a new cafe to be staffed by the homeless.

The cafe, Captain Taylor’s Kitchen, will help rehabilitate its homeless staff with a wage and workplace training - and raise funds for Streetwork’s other projects. The cafe is set to open to the public in time for the Festival in August.

Streetwork chief executive, Gordon Watson, said: “The cafe plans have been brewing for quite some time since we took over the building, but we had struggled to find funding until we were given a grant by the Scottish Executive enterprise fund.”

Training will be provided by Streetwork’s new Higher Ground Training Scheme, focussing on confidence building, interview techniques and offering qualifications in skills such as IT, health, hygiene, service and hospitality.

Mr Watson added: “We want it to be a place where people come for a cup of coffee and decent service, and leave knowing that they’ve contributed to a good cause.”

Streetwork has been providing support for the homeless since 1992, and runs several services including a crisis centre on Holyrood Road, formerly known as the Cowgate Centre, and other support services on New Street and Bellevue Street.

It also previously operated The Ark until its closure in 2007, when the city council controversially cut its funding following a reported rise in complaints about street drunks and aggressive beggars.
